Managing Stress and Emotions for Workplace Performance

Course Introduction

In today's fast-paced and high-pressure work environments, employees are continuously expected to deliver results, manage competing priorities, adapt to change, and maintain professional relationships. While performance targets continue to rise, emotional resilience and stress management capabilities often determine whether individuals thrive or experience burnout.

The Managing Stress and Emotions for Workplace Performance program, delivered by BOOST, is designed to enhance employees' emotional regulation, stress resilience, and psychological agility in professional settings.

This program moves beyond theoretical discussions of stress. It provides practical tools rooted in workplace realities, deadline pressure, difficult stakeholders, organizational change, conflict, and performance accountability. Participants will learn how stress impacts cognition, decision-making, communication, and teamwork, and how emotional intelligence can be strategically leveraged to maintain productivity and professional presence.

By the end of the program, participants will not only understand stress triggers but will be equipped with applied frameworks, behavioral techniques, and performance-focused coping strategies that enhance both personal well-being and organizational effectiveness.
